As new Joint Secretary of IECCD, I look forward to working with all internal and external stakeholders and the development partners for the coordination and management of International Economic Cooperation.

The reform agenda of aid management continues on its long journey from aid effectiveness to development effectiveness. The Busan Partnership for effective development builds on a range of international efforts to improve effectiveness of development co-operation. Nepal is one of 76 countries participating in the second round of global monitoring survey of the implementation of Busan commitment for which the IECCD is taking the lead in Nepal. In order to support the survey process, focal points from development partners, parliamentarians, civil society and private sectors have been identified and started data collection.

The Global Partnership for Effective Development Co-operation is an inclusive political forum bringing together governments, bilateral and multilateral organisations, civil society and representatives from parliaments and the private sector from around the world that are committed to strengthening the effectiveness of development co-operation to produce maximum impact for development. The Global Monitoring Survey tracks progress in the implementation of Busan commitments for more effective development co-operation. Its monitoring framework is comprised of a set of 10 indicators, with targets for 2015, which focus on strengthening developing country institutions, increasing transparency and predictability of development co-operation, enhancing gender equality, as well as supporting greater involvement of civil society, parliaments and private sector in development efforts. The survey framework seeks to capture behaviour change: it focuses on “how” stakeholders engage in development cooperation. It is complementary with other accountability frameworks which monitor “what” results and outcomes stem from development cooperation (e.g. the MDGs and SDGs monitoring).

Information collected through the global monitoring exercise is compiled into a global progress report ahead of the ministerial-level meeting of the Global Partnership in Kenya. The findings will be discussed and submitted before the high level meeting. It is realized that aid money in itself is not sufficient for the development of any country. It is supplement to the other resources of partner countries. It also demands inclusive development blending with mobilization of other resources such as internal revenue, remittances in addition to the involvement of private sector, civil society and parliamentarians in the development efforts of the country. To this end, IECCD also plans in 2016 to commence a Development Financing Assessment.

The Monitoring Surveys conducted in 2008, 2011 and 2013 indicate that Nepal is making significant progress in various front of development cooperation. Among them are aid transparency, increasing ownership in project implementation in line with country system and national priority, efforts of bringing aid on budget, enacting of development cooperation policy, efforts of involving civil society, private sector and parliamentarians in matters of aid effectiveness.

When completed, the survey will provide evidence based information and analysis on the real situation and what we need to improve in the area of aid effectiveness. In order for this survey to be successful, all focal points representing development partners, parliamentarians, civil society and private sectors are required to provide responses that are accurate and where requested provide realistic feedbacks for improving the current situation of aid effectiveness.
